

UC HASTINGS
COLLEGE OF THE LAW

Greetings,

UC Hastings College of the Law is committed to creating and maintaining a respectful workplace that is free from all forms of discrimination, harassment, abusive conduct and retaliation. It is our responsibility to ensure that our workplace conduct is professional at all times. To that end, regular training helps us understand what is expected of us in the workplace.

The State of California requires supervisors to be trained every two years on preventing sexual harassment and abusive conduct or, as it is commonly known, 'bullying'. Along with your colleagues, I request your participation in this interactive training to help you understand your responsibilities and rights according to Federal and State laws and regulations, as well as the College's Non-Discrimination and Equal Opportunity and Non-Harassment policies.

The faculty members that are included as participants are those who engage students for various activities that qualify them as supervisors for the purposes of having to take this training.

Thank you for taking this training to refresh your knowledge about these important laws and workplace conduct expectations.

David L. Faigman

Chancellor and Dean
John F. Digardi Distinguished Professor of Law
University of California Hastings College of the Law