CITIES AND COUNTIES IN THE GLOBAL ECONOMY

In a post-industrial global economy, local governments' growing economic power has profound implications for the relationship between commerce and democracy, and for our concept of local government.

Join us for:

A Hard Look at the Local Economic . . .

Creative economic policies and development tools -- community benefit agreements, project labor agreements, first source and local hiring rules, living wage ordinances and the like -- let cities and counties flex their economic muscle to achieve social, economic and environmental ends.

Do these policies work? What legal issues do they generate? What challenges do they pose for the legal and political framework that supports our market system?

KEYNOTE ADDRESS: "Cities, Economic Development and the Free Trade Constitution," by Professor Richard Schragger, University of Virginia School of Law.

PANELISTS: Cecilia Estolano, CEO, Community Redevelopment Agency of Los Angeles; Julian Gross, Director, Community Benefits Law Center; and others.

In cooperation with the County Counsels'
Association of California

. . . and Immigration Policies

In a global economy, people move when jobs move, and the immigration issues that arise have local dimensions. Day laborers, sanctuary and non-cooperation policies, policing, and state and federal preemption of local laws are issues that local governments face daily.

What is local government's role in responding to immigration? What litigation is in progress? What issues can local government lawyers expect to encounter in this fast-developing area?

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 24, 2008
