

ACS Seeks Associate Director of Programs

The American Constitution Society (ACS), one of the nation's leading progressive legal organizations, seeks an experienced, versatile and energetic Associate Director of Programs to play a vital role in coordinating and facilitating ACS's rapidly expanding output of innovative, highly relevant substantive legal and public policy work. The new Associate Director will work with existing Programs staff to:

assist in coordinating the substantive work of ACS's Constitution in the 21st Century project, an ambitious multi-year effort to promote a progressive vision of the Constitution by engaging constitutional scholars, hands-on practitioners, public interest advocates, public officials and law students in the thinking necessary to formulate and advance a progressive vision that is intellectually sound, practically relevant, and faithful to our constitutional values and heritage; facilitate the work of a diverse array of Issue Groups made up of leading lawyers, academics and advocates; assist in ensuring that ACS's various substantive initiatives develop and proceed in a complementary fashion;

maintain relations with public interest advocates, academics and private practitioners; work with authors writing policy papers for ACS and edit those papers;

edit publications; and assist in conference and program planning.

The ideal candidate will be familiar with constitutional and other legal scholarship, experienced in constitutional and civil rights litigation, and knowledgeable about the public policy process. A minimum of three years of such experience is desired, as are outstanding analytical and writing skills and strong interpersonal skills.

Salary commensurate with experience. ACS is an equal opportunity employer; women, people of color and individuals with disabilities are encouraged to apply. E-mail cover letter and resume to jobs@ACSLaw, or fax to (202) 393-6189 (Attention: Katie McGriff, Office Manager).

No phone calls please.