Be a Buddy for a 1L

ATTENTION 2Ls and 3Ls!!! BE A BUDDY FOR A FIRST YEAR!!!

Remember what it was like on your first day of Hastings? Somehow vignettes from the Paper Chase came flooding to your mind as you walked into your first law school class (insert mental picture of scariest professor).

Well, those years are long gone (we hope) and now there is a new 1L flock coming in to relive those moments. "Oh, the horror!!!"

However, you can help ease this transition by becoming a "Buddy" through the ABA/LSD Buddy Program. If you'd like to become a friend, resouce, personal savior, role model and (insert word that will boost your ego) to a 1L, please send an email to hastingsabalsd@yahoo.com.

No pressure, but remember your conscience is your friend. Do the right thing and be a Buddy! Come on- just email back already before you forget!

HEALTH INSURANCE WAIVERS

Remember the deadline: August 30, 2006 at 3:00 PM. Students who have other medical insurance and want to waive the Hastings' Student policy must submit their waiver form and proof of coverage to Student Health Services by August 30, 2006 at 3:00 PM. Waivers can be downloaded off the website. Note: Students who waive the Hastings' health insurance policy are still eligible to use the Health Services on campus.

PHYSICAL EXAMS AND TB TESTS FOR 1LS

First year students who have not completed their physical examination forms should do so as soon as possible. Student Health Services has the names of local clinics that will perform a comparatively low-cost physical exam. Incoming students who have not had a TB skin test in the last six months and/or have not already have one as part of their admission physical can check with Student Health Services about getting the test done.

INSURANCE CLAIM FORMS FOR SUMMER DOCTOR VISITS

Students who had medical care during the summer should download a claim form from the Health Services portion of the UC Hastings' website and mail it in to the insurance company/PIA. You must file a claim form for each illness and accident. The new insurance policy began on August 17, 2006. As of that date students who have Hastings' student insurance must use Student Health as their primary physician and cannot self-refer, except in the case of emergency. Ongoing referrals from spring semester 2006 need to be rewritten for this school year. See Student Health Staff with any questions.

INSURANCE BROCHURES AND CARDS

Insurance policy brochures were placed in SIC folders on August 21, 2006. You can also read the brochure in its entirety on-line. The paper card on the back of the brochure may be used as a temporary card until a permanent card is received in September. Insurance cards will be mailed to your current home address so be sure your address is updated with the Records Office. Continuing students can use their Express Scripts pharmacy card from last year and will not receive a new one. Express Scripts Cards will be mailed to new students. New students who need to fill a prescription before their cards are ready may get a temporary card from the Student Health Office.

MEDICAL REFERRALS

Students with Hastings' Insurance who are still receiving medical care that was started during the summer, or continued from last year, need to come by Student Health for a referral for continuing care beginning August 17, 2006. Referrals from last semester are not honored in the new school year.

NEW MEDICAL BENEFIT FEATURES FOR STUDENTS WITH SCHOOL INSURANCE

There is no longer a Motor Vehicle Limitation, the plan now covers motor vehicle accidents up to the plan maximum. Also new this year, all anesthesiologist and Emergency Room physicians are paid at 80% of network charges after deductible including in-hospital emergent support specialty physicians. An STD Screening Plan benefit has been added so STD screening exams will be covered up to $100. Note: The PPO for school insurance is Beech Street Corp.

CAREER TIPS

What Employers Want

By Pam Hyland

As the fall recruiting season opens, the question arises, "What are these employers looking for?" The CSO counselors often hear, "All the firms want is grades!" but this simply isn't true. Employers seek a wide variety of qualifications and personal qualities.

Large firms do weigh transcripts more than medium size and smaller firms, government or public interest organizations do. They use class rank as a way to limit the number of applicants and as a marketing tool. However, even large firms are not focused solely on grades. They look for attention to detail and legal writing skills as illustrated by your cover letters, resumes and writing samples. They meet with students in person to assess the students' social skills, poise and personality. And, they invite students for call-back interviews to determine the fit with the other members of the firm's team. They know they can teach students lawyering skills; what they look for in interviews is personality, professionalism and maturity.

Medium and smaller firms, the ones that typically hire after OCI is over, are generally more concerned with students' ability to work independently and to make an immediate contribution to the firm than they are with class standing. While all legal employers look for "go getters" who are eager to work hard, smaller firms have less time and resources for training and "hand holding" so they look for students with the maturity, motivation and common sense to work independently, to ask questions when they need help, and to roll up their sleeves to solve small office crises such as jammed copiers.

Government employers typically are less concerned with high grades than they are with dedication to serving the constituency, i.e., the people of the state or the nation. While still expecting excellent work and high professionalism, government employers seek students who have sufficient intrinsic motivation to overcome the lower salaries.

Public interest employers are perhaps the least concerned with class standing, although there are certainly exceptions to this rule in the high-profile public interest organizations such as the Sierra Club and the ACLU. Rather, they are looking for students with a track record of interest and dedication to progressive causes. Resumes for public interest students can be longer because public interest employers want to see the full history of students' involvement and dedication. Because public interest organizations pay less than other legal employers, they look for employees who have motivation and interest to do great legal work on behalf of disadvantaged clients.

All legal employers look favorably upon Hastings candidates because they know they can expect solid legal skills, high professionalism and eagerness to provide exceptional client service from all our students, not just from the ones at the top of the class.
